Scientific American.

Volume Fourteen begins September 11, 1858. M ECHANICS, INVENTORS, MANUFACTURERS AND Louis Napoleon, they had taken all the treasure and Farmers.—The "Scientific American" has now reached its teenth Year, and will enter upon a New Volume on the 11th September. It is the only weekly publication of the kind now issued in this country, and it has a very extensive circulation in all the States of the Union. It is not, as some might suppose from its title, a dry, abstruse work on technical science; on the contrary, it so deals with the great events going on in the scien-tific, mechanical and industrial worlds, as to please and instruct every one. If the Mechanic or Artizan wishes to know the best machine in use, or how to make any substance employed in his business—if the Housewife wishes to get a recipe for making a good celor, &c.—if the Inventor wishes to know what is going on in the way of improvements—if the Manufacturer wishes to keep posted with the times, and thus to employ the best facilities in his business—if the Man of Leisure or Study wishes to keep him ers, mowers, and a thousand other machines and appliances, both of peace and war—all these desiderate can be found in the "Scientific American, and not elsewhere. They are here presented in a reliable and interesting form, adapted to the comprehension of minds unlearned in the higher branches of science ever a very serious defeat."

FOREIGN NEWS!

LATEST FROM EUROPE And the Scene of War!!

Last Sunday forenoon the American Clipper Ship Vulture, 28 days from Panama for Singapare, touched off this port to obtain some supplies, vegetables, &c. Informed by the Captain that he had New York papers on board to the 20th of June (our last mail was to the 5th of June) recounting one of the most terrible battles ever fought since the days of Cressy or Agincourt at least, at Magenta between the Allied Franco-Sardinians and the Austrians, our worthy townsman Capt. T. Spencer, who is always on hand when a man is wanted or a public service to be done, immediately jumped into his gig accompanied by his brother Mr. C. N. Spencer and Mr. A. Potter of the Polynesian office, and after one of the smartest chases on record boarded the Vulture, and obtained the papers

With this acknowledgement for a favor which enables us to lay before the public the latest news of the most interesting character, in advance of ty upon the public. On the same principle, any medicine | the regular mail we proceed to extract from the papers in our possession.

The Battle of Magenta. 32,000 men put hors de combat. Milan insurgent and evacuated by the Austrians. Victory as usual claimed on both sides. Opening of the British Parliament and the Queen's Speech ! European news to the 8th of June from London had arrived in New York. And from the N. Y. Herald of the 20th, we copy the following excellent summary of the fearful battle, or rather bat-

The battle of Magenta took place on the 4th of June and continued for three days, General Baraguay d' Hilliers has been super-tles, at Magenta, 12 miles from Milan

seded in his command by General Forney.

Garibaldi was making headway in upper Lombardy and had occupied Varese and Como. At the reception of the news of the battle of Magenta, Paris was illuminated and 100 guns fired from the Hotel des Invalids. In Turkey a revolution is imminent. Servia, Bosnia, Hertzegovina and Montenegro are in open revolt, and the Russian agency is no longer

The Herald concludes its review of the events in Italy thus : The Great Battle at Magenta!

Advance of the Allies in Lombardy. The steamship Anglo-Saxon arrived from Liverpool at Farther Point on Saturday morning, on her way to Quebec, and reached the latter place yesterday morning. The highly important intelligence from the seat of war, as it came to us in a brief dispatch from Further Point, we laid before our readers yesterday, and we are now able to give some further details of the neavy action between the Allies and the Austrians at Magenta, which we have since received from Quebec. Previous advices by the Europa represented the Austrians as in full retreat across the Ticino into Lombardy, and from the account of the great battle at Magenta it appears that the Allies pressed on with their whole moveable force at two points on that river, drove the enemy across into their own territory, and brought them to an action at Magenta, a city only 12 miles distant from Milan, the Lombard capital. In the magnitude of the numbers engaged, in the heavy loss on both sides, and in the destruction of general officers and others of high rank, this battle was one of the greatest of modern times. There were engaged in the field not much less than 300,000 men, from a hundred to a hundred and thirty thousand of the Allies, and from a hundred and fifty to a hundred and eighty thousand Austrians. On the side of the Allies from nine to twelve thousand were killed and wounded, including the French General Espinasse, who was killed, and Marshal Canrobert, who fell mortally wounded. The Austrians, it is said, lost twenty thousand, of whom over twelve thousand were killed and wounded, and seven thousand taken prisoners. Their own accounts admit they had four Generals and five staff officers wounded. The French captured three cannon and two standards from the enemy, and the Austrians took one cannon from the Allies. Louis Napoleon took part in the action, probably supported by the King of Sardinia; but from the fact that General McMahon was rewarded with a Marshal's baton and the title of Duke of Magenta on the field, it would seem that the hottest part of the battle was conducted by him, he probably having taken command when Canrobert fell. Field Marshal Baron Hess commanded the Austrians, Francis Joseph not having then reached that point. The defeat at Magenta, which resulted to the Austrians after two days' terrible fighting, was followed by an immediate insurrection in Milan, which proclaimed for the cause of Sardinia and Italy. The Austrian garrison was therefore compelled to abandon it; but to what point they withdrew is not stated. The probability is, however, that their whole force has retired in the direction of Mincio. At the latest accounts the French had not taken nossession of Milan: but according to the despatches of cannon, as well as 12,000 muskets, which the Austrians had left behind them in that capital. The entry of Such, in brief, are the points of the action at Magenta, commenced on the 4th of June and continued to the night of the 6th. The French Emperor claims it as a decisive victory, but on the other hand the Austrian accounts speak of it as a series of battles with varied successes and heavy losses on both sides. There is no doubt that it was a running fight, and though called even a very serious defeat. In a general rout the first thing a beaten army does, is to abandon its artillery and baggage. The Austrians untenable in the midst of an insurrectionary population, and in front of a foreign enemy in force; and moreover it is not very strongly fortified. At the bat tle of Castiglione, in 1796, the first Napoleon took seventy field pieces and all the caisons of the enemy; and PRACTICAL COOPER AND GAUGER. the Allies took nine guns, the capture of three cannons and two standards was rather a small affair.

spectfully informs his old patrons and the public generally, that he continues the 'coperage Business in all its various branches, at the above stand, and hopes, by faithful workmanship, promptness, and moderate prices, to secure a liberal share of patronage, and render entire satisfaction to all who may favor him with their orders.

In this view we are disposed to look upon the battle of Magenta rather in the light of a drawn battle than a decisive victory, admitting of course the advantage gained by the Allies in securing a position on the left bank of the Ticino.

about twenty-five miles northwest of Pavia, has a population of 1,200, and is celebrated for its magnificent bridge of twelve arches of solid masonry which spans the river, thus uniting Lombardy with Piedmont. Turbigo occupies a point on the river a little to the north of Buffalors, about 13 miles from Milan and 18 from Cuggiono. Magenta is a small town of about 5,000 inhabitants, lying nearly midway between Milan and the

The passage of the Allies was strongly contested both at Buffalora and Turbigo-the fight at the latter place being doubtful for an entire day-the Austrians retiring as far as Magenta, where it would appear the fight came to a crisis. Assuming that the Austrians were not very badly beaten at Magenta, and considering that they have in their rear several strongly fortified, almost impregnable cities, well garrisoned, to fall back upon, and a fresh army of 50,000 men under Clam-Gallas having just come to their support through the Tyrol, we do not anticipate that one reverse can break down their ardor. but will probably stimulate them to new daring. Besides, while the Tyrol is open to them, and the communication between Vienna and all their strong points -Verona, Mantua, Peschiera, Legnano, Bresica and Milan itself-is so immediate, there is no reason to regard the position of the Austrians as either dangerous or desperate enough to dispirit and demoralize the Empire by a defeat, even if it prove to have been a disas-

We anticipate that the really great battle of the campaign is yet to be fought under the walls of Verona, where on so many previous occasions, from 1796 to 1848, the attempts of an enemy to pass the Adige were severely contested. The square encompassed by the fortified towns of Verona, Peschiera, Mantua and Legnano, if well defended, is to the fortunes of Austria what a well maintained square of infantry often is in turning the scale of battle

The Austrian account speaks of a "series of battles with varying success on both sides, but still undecided up to the night of the 9th, with great losses on both sides." It was believed that proposals for peace would be made if the French entered Milan.

A despatch dated Paris, Monday night, June 6, to the London Post, says the municipality of Milan proclaimed King Victor Emanuel, and have presented an address to him in the presence of the Emperor, To-morrow the King will make his enry into Milan. The Times, in its editorial remarks on the subect, says :- It now seems probable that this hard fight is even yet undecided, but that on the whole the French have the best of it. The absence of late despatches by way of Paris is not considered indicative of French successes. The opinion was becoming current in London that the victory of Magenta was a victory in which the French were defeated; and their failure to occupy Milan, only twelve miles from Magenta, strengthened this view.

The movement which preceded the battle of Magenta was not clearly stated, but it was previously announced that the Allies were about to cross the Ticino, to the number of about 100,000 men, and it is presumed the rapid movement of the Allied army prevented the Austrians from completing the retreat which they had commenced, and compelled them to accept battle on the banks of the the 7th, when the Queen in person delivered the following speech : My LORDS AND GENTLEMEN-I avail myself with satisfaction, in the present anxious state of public affairs, of the advice of my Parliament, which I have summoned to meet with the least possible delay. I have directed that papers shall be laid before you from which you will learn how earnest and unceasing have been my endeavors to preserve the peace of Europe. These endeavors have unhappily failed, and war has been declared between France and Sardinia on one side, and Austria on the other. Receiving assurances of friendship from both the contending parties, I intend to maintain between them a strict and impartial neutrality, and I hope with God's assistance to preserve to my people the blessings of continued peace.

Considering, however, the present state of Euope, I have deemed it necessary to the security of my dominions and the honor of my crown to increase my naval forces to an amount exceeding that which has been sanctioned by Parliament. I rely with confidence on your cordial concurrence in this precautionary measure of defensive policy. The King of the Two Sicilies, having announced to me the death of the King, his father, and his own accession, I have thought, in concert with the Emperor of France, to renew my diplomatic intercourse with the Court of Naples, which had been suspended during the late reign. All my other relations continue on a perfectly satisfactory foot-

Washington, June 18 .- Lord Lyons had a long interview with the Secretary of State to-day on general subjects. There is every reason to believe that Great Britain is at this particular time most anxious to cultivate very friendly relations with us. Lord Lyons is impatient to learn the conclusion of the important question of neutral rights, now under advisement by our government. The Secretary of War has refused to permit any more officers on leave to depart for Europe. It is feared they might join some of the armies, and in the event of being taken prisoners would lead to serious complications, which our government desire to avoid. The results of the war news may be summed up in the following points :-1. The Germans express decided Austrian proclivities, discredit the news because it comes from French sources, and hope for better times. 2. The Italians, Hungarians and French are in eestacies, and believe all the good news, that Austrian tyranny is nearly at an end, and Italian liberty a certainty. 3. Straggling parties from all nationalities are Austria, and devoutiv desiring universal liberty 4. Among the evidences of the general interest concerning this battle may be mentioned the sale of seventy thousand copies of the Sunday Herald in this city (New York) alone.

The "conversion" of Lola Montez is announced. She has, it is said quietly settled down an humble, peaceful, exemplary, religious woman, in her own domicil in Picadilly, London, having amassed a sufficient sum to purchase and pay for a house, which is now the receptacle and centre of a large number of wealthy and pious enthusiasts of London, male when we remember that at the fight at Palestro, which occurred a few days previous to this affair at Magenta, visitors is Mrs. Thistlewaite, formerly an actress who was familiarly known as Laura Bell, and was about as notorious as Lola herself. About the time that she turned from the error of her way she won the heart of Magenta rather in the light of a drawn battle than of the rich commoner. She married him, and is now a bright and shining light in Exeter Hall. It was she who was the principal instrument in bringing sbout Lola's change. It is said that Mrs. Thistlewaite The conflict commenced by the Allies crossing the | daily drives her chariot, with four milk-white horses,
